

Poem by Douglas W. Motl

New York

The strong among us dig and pray In sadness where the heroes lay And one by one commit to earth The innocent who died

But, this was not their judgment day And this was not their price to pay And where two stood together Now stand millions side by side